The City of Miami known as the “Magic City” is located in Southeast Florida, in Miami-Dade County on the Miami River, between the Florida Everglades and the Atlantic Ocean.

HISTORY

No other city in the United States is like Miami. Since its foundation, barely 108 years ago, Miami has gone through times of turmoil and triumph. However, its increasingly diverse population has been able to turn a tourist oriented city into a glowing, cosmopolitan, international metropolis.

From the beginning, Miami’s rich sub-tropical abundance, its sun, sand and beautiful beaches have attracted seekers and dreamers. The Tequesta Indians found this land more than 10,000 years ago and had it all for themselves until the Spanish “rediscovered” it again in the 16th century.

In the 19th century, wreckers from the Bahamas came to South Florida and the keys to hunt for the remains of an international array of ships that crashed into the Great Florida Reef. At about the same time, the Seminole Indians, along with a group of runaway slaves came to Florida.

In 1891, a plucky widow named Julia Tuttle moved to Florida and purchased 640 acres of land on the north bank of the Miami River. Tuttle later talked wealthy railroad builder Henry Flagler into extending his railroad into Miami, building a luxury hotel and laying out a new town. These developments resulted in the birth of a new city. The City of Miami was incorporated on July 28, 1896.

As a result of these developments, thousands of new comers arrived in Florida. Even then, Miami had a very diverse population; people with a variety of cultures, from every part of the world flocked to this new city. Miami’s first mayor was an Irish Catholic. Most of the early merchants were Jewish. African Americans and Black Bahamians made up one-third of the City’s incorporators.

Despite vast developments Miami fell into a deep depression three years earlier than the rest of the nation. In 1926 a terrible hurricane struck Miami. As a result 100 people lost their lives and thousands of homes were destroyed. Miami, however never stayed down for long. Its resilient spirit brought it out of the 1930’s depression ahead of the rest of the nation. This happened in part due to the aviation industry. During the depression, Pan American Airways began the era of modern aviation with “Flying Clippers” from Miami Dinner Key. Even then, Pan Am advertised Miami as the “Gateway to the Americas”. Today, the Pan-am terminal is the home to City of Miami officials: City hall.

Countless men and women who trained in Miami during World War II hurried back to South Florida after the war creating another period of phenomenal growth. Despite all of this development, Black Miamians were still waiting for their own dreams to come true. Segregation of the races was prescribed by both law and custom as the order of the day. Even the color of the beaches was clearly defined during this period as separated.

As a result of this segregation, Overtown developed a unique identity and a sense of pride in its people. After decades of civil battle, school segregation was finally defeated in the 1970's. So teachers, administrators and staff of all public schools were integrated.

When Fidel Castro took over Cuba in 1959, Miami's history took an unexpected turn. In a single decade, more than a half million Cubans fled to South Florida. In 1980, Miami experienced its worst immigration wave during the Mariel boatlift. In about four months, 125,000 refugees arrived in Miami. As they stayed and prospered, they helped transform Miami into a true connector to Latin America.

During the 1980's, our city experienced days of racial tension. A wind of rage, hate and fear blew over the city. At least 18 people died and more than a thousand were injured. Another sort of wind blew over Miami on August 24, 1992. Hurricane "Andrew" lashed South Florida leaving death and destruction behind. Once again Miami overcame the nightmare.

Three years later the City of Miami fell into the worst financial crisis of its history. To help the City survive, the state government created a supervisory board to watch over the municipal services. At the time of this fiscal catastrophe, major bond-rating services reduced Miami's ratings to junk.

At the beginning of the 21st century, things started to change for the better. Since 2001, the credit ratings have been steadily increasing and now the city is at an all time high level standing with all three of its credit-rating firms.

A six-capital improvement program valued at more than 500 million dollars has been designed to bring sweeping infrastructure enhancement to every neighborhood in the City. The plan includes storm water sewer and drainage projects to mitigate flash floods during the rainy season.

More than ever before, our parks have become a vibrant place for families to enjoy together. The summer programs in addition to sports have many other options for kids with artistic talents.

Our Neighborhoods are more secure thanks to the "Quality of Life Task Force", a combined effort of different municipal departments. This specialized team has been able to enforce the law and eradicate many illegal activities, as well as, remove thousands of abandoned and untagged vehicles from our streets.

Looking to the future, we have "Midtown Miami" a 1.2 Billion commercial and residential development to be built in the Wynwood area, close to Little Haiti, Overtown, Allapattah and the Design District. Miami Midtown will be the cornerstone for the creation of jobs and economic development in those areas.

History proves that the spirit of Miami's dynamic, vibrant people always remains strong. Let's be proud of our rich history and keep working towards a bright future.

POPULATION

According to the 2000 census, it has a population of 362,470. By the year 2010 the population in the City is projected to rise to 390,191.

Pro basketball suffered in popularity in the early 1950's, but one rule change -- that of the 24-second clock -- transformed the sport from a dull, stalling game to an exciting, offensive showcase. Icons along the way, from Bob Cousy and Wilt Chamberlain to Magic Johnson, Larry Bird and Michael Jordan, have immortalized what's now the National Basketball Association's game, creating long-standing rivalries from coast to coast.

Everglades Alligator Farm

South Florida's oldest working alligator farm on the Everglades edge (but not within Everglades National Park) has more than 3,000 toothsome gators to view in a rustic atmosphere. Farm visits include airboat rides and walking tours to see alligators, crocodiles, caimans, and snakes from Florida and elsewhere, along with the opportunity to be photographed holding a baby alligator. Originally started as an airboat ride attraction, transition began after 1985 changes in Florida law permitting alligator farming. In the 1960s, federal officials believed the American alligator was close to extinction and commercial farming was seen as a way to preserve these reptiles traced back to dinosaur times. Smaller gators are kept in grow-out pens with larger ones moved to breeding ponds where females have one clutch of eggs per year with up to 45 eggs. Scheduled entertainment includes Alligator Feeding and a Weird Animal Show. 40351 Southwest 192nd Avenue, Homestead. (305) 247-2628

Everglades Safari Park

For some 35 years, Everglades Safari Park has provided a “river of grass” showcase, becoming one of the Florida Everglades’ largest, most complete attractions. The park offers several ways to observe the Everglades, including an Airboat Ride, Alligator Show, and a Jungle Trail. Airboat rides are guided by skilled narrators familiar with Everglades history, vegetation, and wildlife. The Alligator Show provides informative, interactive opportunity to become familiar with features of American alligators as well as other animals. A Jungle Trail leads to an Alligator Farm with more than 400 American alligators, a crocodile exhibit, and a replica of a Chickee Village.

Gold Coast Railroad Museum

Featuring more than 40 pieces of railroad rolling stock and equipment including diesel and steam locomotives, the museum is dedicated to preserving, exhibiting, and operating historic rail equipment. The Museum was formed in 1957 by activists trying to save pieces of Florida history that were taken for granted and rapidly disappearing. Its collection includes the Ferdinand Magellan (the private railroad car built for President Franklin Roosevelt), the Florida East Coast Railway locomotive 153, (the engine that pulled the rescue train out of Marathon after the 1935 hurricane); and the 113, (an FEC locomotive built in 1913 and used in regular revenue service over the entire Florida East Coast railroad). The "Train Crew Member For-A-Day" program enables the public to act as a part of the Train Crew on Museum trains. The program provides for 30 minutes or more of run time (actual throttle time) in one of the Museum's active locomotives.

Participants in this program are under strict supervision at all times

Lowe Art Museum

The Lowe is South Florida’s only area museum owning a distinguished collection of Egyptian, Greek, and Roman antiquities. From origins in three classrooms in 1948, history of the Lowe Art Museum reflects commitment to serving the University of Miami along with residents and visitors. A gift from philanthropists Joe and Emily Lowe allowed the 1952 opening of a free-standing museum facility to the public as South Florida’s first art museum. Its 10,000-object collection is one of the most important in the southeast, with strengths in Renaissance and Baroque, American, Native American, pre-Columbian, and Asian art. A 1956 donation by Alfred I. Barton bought one of the country's finest collections of Native American art. In 1987, the Lowe was designated a “Major Cultural Institution” by the State of Florida. On the U.M. campus in Coral Gables, Metrorail arrivals should take the “University” stop. From there, a free U.M. shuttle bus heads for the museum, which has a gift shop.

Miami MetroZoo

Surviving hurricanes Betsy and Andrew, today’s Miami Metrozoo can be traced back to Key Biscayne’s Crandon Park Zoo, created in 1948 when three monkeys, two black bears and a goat were picked up for $270 from a road show stranded near Miami. The collection grew to 1,200 animals, resulting in the Crandon Park Zoo, which in 1967 succeeded in the rare captive birth and rearing of an armadillo. Then 1965’s Hurricane Betsy caused deaths of 250 animals leading to Metrozoo, a county-operated zoo opening in 1981, with 38 exhibits covering 200 acres. In 1982, another 25 acres and a monorail were added, with following years bringing the Wings of Asia exhibit, a 1.6 acre free-flight aviary and more. In 1989, Metrozoo debuted both the first koala born on the east coast and PAWS, the children's petting zoo. In 1990, the Asian River Life Experience opened with small-clawed Asian otters, a blood python, Malayan water monitor, clouded leopards, land tortoises, muntjac deer, demoiselle cranes, and fly-river turtles. On Aug. 24, 1992, Hurricane Andrew blew away some 5,000 trees and Wings of Asia, built to withstand winds of up to 120 m.p.h. The 300 exotic birds, representing the finest collection of Asian birds anywhere, were lost. Reopening four months later, by July, 1993, animals were back home at Metrozoo and 7,000 trees had been planted. Exhibits now include the Andean Condor (1999), Meerkats (2000), Cuban Crocodiles (2001), Squirrel Monkeys (2001) and "Dr. Wilde's World," housing traveling zoological exhibits. American Bankers Family Aviary, Wings of Asia opened in May, 2003. 12400 Southwest 152nd Street, Miami. (305) 251-0400

Miami Museum of Science

The Museum of Science has more than 140 hands-on exhibits exploring mysteries of the universe. In addition to robotic dinosaurs and the other manufactured displays, live demonstrations and collections of rare natural history specimens provide informative fun, and often involve audience participation. The Wildlife Center has more than 175 live reptiles and birds of prey. The adjacent Space Transit Planetarium projects astronomy and laser shows and interactive demonstrations of computer technology and cyberspace. Museum favorites include the Cyber City exhibit that explores the future of computers in society and the nationally-recognized Falcon Batchelor Bird of Prey Center, which not only teaches about these aggressive but lovable animals but also helps save endangered ones. 3280 South Miami Avenue, Coconut Grove. (305) 646-4200.

Miami Seaquarium

After a fall 2005 shutdown forced by Hurricane Wilma, Miami Seaquarium, open 365 days, is back with a new look, new shows, and value-added admission specials. Discovery Bay, home to Nile crocodiles, and Shark Channel, with brown nurse sharks, are restored to watery splendor. A Sea Lion Show at the Golden Dome features Salty and the Reef Rangers, and the Flipper the Dolphin Show takes place at Flipper Lagoon. The Seaquarium centerpiece remains the Whale & Dolphin Stadium, home to Lolita and her Pacific white-sided dolphin pals. A "Swim with our Dolphins Program" continues, featuring one-on-one close-up observation opportunity. Annual Seaquarium extravaganzas include an Easter Egg Hunt, Splashtacular Summer events, Monster Splash Halloween Bash and Winter Kids Fest. 4400 Rickenbacker Causeway, Miami. (305) 361-5705

Parrot Jungle Island

A brand new jungle has bloomed on an island near Miami -- Parrot Jungle Island, a $47-million park opened in June, 2003, replacing Parrot Jungle and Gardens, a South Florida fixture dating to 1936. The new 18.6-acre entertainment destination, between downtown Miami and South Beach just off MacArthur Causeway, is home to some 3,000 exotic animals and 500 plant species, with animal stage shows, one-of-a-kind aviaries, jungle trails, a petting farm and more. Parrot Jungle Island's centerpiece is Jungle Theater, an open-air "ooh" and "aaah" arena. Guests are "face-to-beak" with more than 200 parrots and macaws in the Manu Encounter, the world's only aviary replicating the clay cliffs of Manu, Peru. Everglades Habitat recreates South Florida's "river of grass" and its wildlife. The park's huge collection of reptiles and amphibians, including an extremely rare albino alligator and a 21-foot crocodile, are housed in the Serpentarium. At the 1,200-seat Parrot Bowl, shows feature antics of trained parrots, cockatoos, and macaws. Theme park admission is not required for access to the indoor/outdoor Lakeside Café, overlooking Flamingo Lake with tropical fish and a sea of pink Caribbean flamingos.

Vizcaya Museum and Gardens

Industrialist James Deering's 34-room winter residence showcases a long-gone lifestyle as well as America's finest collection of 15th through 19th century furniture and decorative arts. When Deering (1859-1925) started to build his estate more than 85 years ago, he enlisted help from New York painter Paul Chalfin. They made buying trips to Europe for important architectural components, furniture, and art including wall panels, ceilings, mantels, and tapestries. Each room conveys a particular period style, from Renaissance to Baroque, Rococo and Neoclassic. Deering's suite covers several Neoclassic periods. In the sitting room, Italian carved wood paneling frames Louis XVI silk on walls, and massive mahogany desks are French Empire. A French Savonnerie rug dates from the early 19th century. His bedroom contains a gold laurel wreath on the ceiling, bed drapery supported by a bronze eagle and gold-decorated mahogany furniture of the Napoleonic French Empire period. Deering's bath features a linen ceiling canopy, suggestive of a Napoleonic campaign tent. Marble walls are decorated with Sheffield silver. Since Vizcaya was acquired by Miami-Dade County in 1952, the main house and contents have undergone extensive restoration. Unoccupied since Deering's death, salt air humidity and neglect had taken their toll. In 1987, the open courtyard was enclosed and air-conditioned for preservation.
